Homeless Shelters That Prioritize ‘the Three Ps’—Especially Privacy

Prefabricated modular campuses in Northern California are offering comforts that may help keep people off the streets—with pets, possessions and private space in mind.

The accommodations at the $57 million San Mateo County Navigation Center in Redwood City resemble Modernist low-rise apartment buildings. The complex has 240 units. Matthew Millman, via the Office of Charles F. Bloszies

This article is part of our Design special section about creating space with the look and feel for one person.

Even before the pandemic, some large homeless shelters in and around San Francisco were not cutting it.

The dormlike settings offered no privacy, no room for possessions and no place for pets—“the three Ps,” said Charles F. Bloszies, an architect and engineer whose namesake firm worked on the Embarcadero Navigation Center in San Francisco and other congregate facilities in Northern California.
